Honest answer: If there was a paper using the exact same methodology but tracking leftward movement, it'd probably label me half-extreme left.

People with more extreme political views L or R are more likely to do activism or watch it online. I nearly exclusive cover activism.

I appreciate you correcting the term as it relates to me. (I'd appreciate you saying so somewhere people actually see it. I didn't mean to reply so many times, I wanted my input on this heard.)

I hope people get full context. I'd recommend starting here:

Something I often point out is the story doesn't end with me. I just do raw video, and that doesn't form worldviews. It shouldn't.

When I tweet something, I want people to reference livestream / criticize others who misjudge it etc.

I just don't see us in opposition.

If they did, I don't think I see it. Are you able to screenshot police involvement where violence occurs after a cop does anything? They seemed to step in once the fight ended. Most of the crowd tried to de-escalate, and I think they succeeded by then.

If I'm wrong, show me.

Point of clarification: Black and green means bike guy in purple and green right? Or someone else? I'm actually confused by the last tweet.

I wish you'd have messaged me before all this. I'd have been happy to figure it out with you.

Live coverage is really difficult. It's not easy to summarize in 280 characters, but it shows why livestream is essential

I invite you to check out the 4-hour stream.

I just disagree with the characterization of misinfo from me; you don't contradict me.

On point 1, I'd kinda refer to whomever else can describe that better.

I thought the car was trying to move forward, not back, but I didn't know so I just kept it out.

Point 2 I'd hope people would watch what I tweeted. I didn't claim otherwise.

Part 3 I think I addressed.

Tim and Andy were not there and characterized my footage differently than I would have - and indeed - did.

The only part of this thread where you disagree with me is me saying cops didn't get involved, and then you acknowledge they got involved after it happened.

My mom lives in Massachusetts but donated to AOC's congressional campaign. Obviously she can't vote for her, but AOC was a sort of grassroots movement, Political donations by individuals are basically like speech. As someone who hates most of Congress, I'd like to be able to donate to a candidate I like (let's call them Ford Fischer Values Candidate (L-TX) somewhere else.

It's not clear to me that it's confirmed. I'd wait on law enforcement to consider it confirmed.

The references to weapons that are consistent with law enforcement confirmed images make me think it's quite possible.

Either way, my advice is to not share.

Right. Like the 2 videos YouTube outright removed of mine were reporting on a Holocaust denier and a white nationalist.

I also point out lefty journalist (and friend) @sandibachom has been twitter suspended twice, both for "hate images" when reporting on far right.

2 8

Tim Pool @Timcast · Jul 30

I'm not sure if thats why I couldnt find it but think about other examples

Anti-racist researchers getting banned on twitter for posting proof white supremacists committed a crime, or journalists like @FordFischer getting videos removed

What it shows me generally is big tech service exclusion and suppression is fairly universal.

I tend to blame the big tech itself, and @Timcast seems to focus on the media that pressures it.

I'm comfortable saying we disagree on that, but a conversation about this is warranted.

Here's the conclusion to my #VenezualanEmbassy story.

Last week, I put a piece @onSubverse detailing the standoff and how far it had gone by then.

Now, the standoff is over. Here's how it went down.

My camera got maced in France and that was really sticky, but I basically just used baby wipes to get it off.

I totally get that. I get so freaked out.

I once got an Uber to the scene of a school shooting a couple hour drive away from me when I heard about it not knowing it was raining cats and dogs there.

Even with umbrella, I got hit with a $1400 camera repair.

So @Timcast I have a real question: Of the 4 journalists you listed, two are @verified presumably based on their association with mainstream outlets.

@MomesMolli and I - who you also list as "actual journalists" - are not verified presumably because we're indie. What do we do?

I find that insurgent leftist content is censored in addition to conservative content.

My work is apolitical (ie, my video of Nancy Pelosi speaking isn't "a Democrat video") but I find that CENTER-left content is what's safe. My videos of any right or far left get axed.

It sounds like @Timcast reached out to Patreon to ask about the asymmetrical application of policy, not with a request to take down IGD. I'm not sure these statements conflict with eachother.

It also sounds like looking back, he realized that was a mistake since they deleted it.

It's not about "political correctness," it's that Facebook doesn't want to host Minds links because @Minds directly competes with FB.

They don't want to be honest about why they don't want that content, so they call it spam.

It honestly is the position of virtually any principled ideology in America, if you ask me. Conservatives should be skeptical of the state having the ultimate power to kill non-defensively, and liberals should be skeptical of the inherent injustice.
